The course compares prominent schools of interpretation within the broader theological landscape and constructively suggests ways to extend the logic of scriptural teaching into contemporary contexts. The twin questions, ‘What does it mean to be biblical?’ and ‘How ought biblical authority actually work?’ are addressed by developing an account of how the ancient biblical writings that comprise Scripture (divine discourse) generate and govern contemporary theological understanding and practice. Several case studies are employed to help students learn how to move from biblical exegesis to systematic theological reflection, and thus to become self-consciously evangelical theologians who know how rightly to handle the word of truth.

We will develop a theological framework and a multi-disciplinary matrix of theories and concepts with which to (1) assess past and present instantiations of these various forms of community and models of social identity, and (2) discern which aspects are more and less commensurate with the normative patterns set forth in the Scriptural account of the drama of creation and redemption. This course aims to equip participants to engage in more acute analysis of prevalent assumptions, truth-claims, values, and practices (held by unreflective Christians and non-Christians alike) in the various sociocultural contexts in which they live, in order to bring authentically Christian patterns of embodied witness and practice to bear within their spheres of influence.
