

PHILOSOPHY

Philosophy is unique and in a constant state of change. The great American philosopher William James once called philosophy “a collective name for questions that have not yet been answered to satisfaction of all by whom they have been asked.” Philosophy, in other words, addresses the big, multifaceted, and worldview type questions that confront everyone who thinks.

Those who study philosophy are empowered to develop, express, and defend their own perspectives in open rational discourse through written and oral communication. Those who study it here learn to bring their ideas into dialogue with the past masters and current dignitaries, many of whom are either great Christian minds or other thought influencers.

By using a distinctly critical and Christian approach, our goal is to help produce the next generation of excellent thinkers. Students will interact with perspectives foreign to and familiar with the Christian tradition. Our graduates will know how to think carefully about these views. And they will be prepared to stake claims and provide reasons with a design plan aimed at truth.

A few of our graduates will take philosophy as their life’s work. The rest will take philosophy to their life’s work. But wherever they may find themselves, all of them will bring the best tools of philosophy to bear on the fundamental moral and intellectual questions of our time.
